Constituting a World Artificer/Bush Mechanic Service Network

*Draft43, for discussion, Paul Wildman/Richard Mochelle/Ross Welch, Dec @ 24-04-2008

We take for granted the institutional idea of a State or Federal Public Service whose office-holders are obliged to act impartially, justly and without prejudice towards all citizens of the world developing exemplar projects in the interests of making a better future for all.

In view of the global situation, there is growing need now for a World Artificer/Bush Mechanic Service of integrity. We face mounting global challenges that threaten the interests of all, problems that may not be resolvable by rival nations acting in their self-interest. It is surely time to constitute a trustworthy body of self-organising 'protective yet creative' genuine public servants, who can be relied upon to serve impartially, fairly and without prejudice towards ensuring a positive future for all beings in the world.

If people are to be trusted to serve impartially, without conflict of interest, they must neither be allegiance bound to any nation, nor belong to any nation. This implies the establishment of a new, democratically organised world service network that functions in parallel and cooperatively with UN agencies, but not subordinate to the UN.

If such public service is to be trusted in a world rife with corruption, they must be strongly resistant to bribery and the temptations of salaries and special privileges. They must be able to address priority needs and challenges without undue concern for earning a living. They must be able to exercise integrity without charging, to serve consistently with a volunteer mind-set.

To enable them to do so their basic needs must be met, free of charge, as far as possible. They will require accommodation, transport, medical care, food and so forth. Such freedom to serve could be enabled only by a large scale, Internet-facilitated institution that achieved two paramount objectives, the first being omni-diversity in its service roles and functions. The choice to perform as world public servants must be open to anyone, in any country, no less to farmers, miners and truck-drivers as to planners, managers and educators. The service must have the capacity to build hospitals, energy plants, transport systems and whole ecotowns. This would ensure that, in the long run, the service could be self-supporting when a sufficiently large scale.

In the shorter and medium term, an equal stipend support system – such as modeled by the Salvation Army – will enable each to purchase items not provided by the service, with funding provided by donation and by similar strategies used by prominent charitable service agencies. Basic provision for families ‘back home’ and some form of superannuation will be included and further such volunteer services can be full or part time thereby allowing for other forms of service and work. The second paramount objective of the institution will be to function as a world property custodianship to maintain land and buildings in perpetual trust for free access by World Servants, volunteer and non-profit community organisations (and for limited lease, on an affordability basis, to the commercial sector).

Such a World Artificer Service institution, based on the above triangle principles, could provide tremendous service opportunities for the millions around the world committed to a voluntaristic service ethic, but who, on their own, have no option but to earn a living in unfulfilling employment. It could also provide a freedom gateway for millions of refugees who because they belong to no nation are ideally situated to move toward a nationally transcendent service support structure.
